

To make security the same as Airports is completely out of the question, I travel extensively and there is no need to make ferry's look like an airport. I am against this type of knee jerk reaction. Are there measures that can be implemented without the complete invasive methods currently in use? I would think a solution can be made that doesn't inconvenience the passengers and cars with additional long lines, they are already too long. With the money you are proposing you could almost build bridges thus eliminating the need for vessels completely.
